Recession Warning Given UN By Jobert

UNITED NATIONS, N.Y., April 10 (Renters).—French Foreign Minister Michel Jobert warned today that the world's current industrial slowdown could easily develop into a recession and cause global crisis. In an address to the General Assembly on the opening day of its political debate on economic problems, he discosed that France's trade balance this year is expected to show a deficit of $4 billion and $5 billion. Mr. Jobert urged delegates not to allow their view of the situation to be obscured by the fourfold increase in oil prices, which he said is only one sign of a more general crisis in international economic relations that has long been in the making.

President Houari Boumedienne of Algeria, speaking after Mr. Jobert, defended oil-price rises and blamed the industrialized nations "overconsumption and gadgetization" for their economic difficulties.

"It is clearly inexcusable to impute the worsening of inflation to the rise in oil prices," he told the

He advocated nationalization of the natural resources of developing lands, extension to other commodities of the control machinery effectively demonstrated by the Organization of Petroleum export-ing Countries, and cancellation of the international debts of many poorer states.

Mr. Bonnedicune, who will confer in Washington tomorrow with President Nixon and Secre-tary of State Henry Kissinger, criticized the concept of the Washington energy conference called by Mr. Nixon in February.

It was more in the nature of a preliminary to a confrontation than the relimitor of a desire for international cooperation. he

WASHINGTON, April 10 for a subpoena if the White (FHT).—Republican members of the House Judiclary Committee said today the White House is risking a suppoena for tapes of presidential conversations by deaying a response to the committee's request for them.

The White House, given a deadline of yesterday, April 9, to say whether it would deliver the tapes, said yesterday it would provide "additional materials" some time after the Easter congressional recess, April 12-22.

The reply angered committee members of both parties, who met in separate cancuses in edvance of a committee meeting tomorrow at which the possibility of issuing a subpoens will be discussed. "It looks like the committee

New Elections Likely

Mrs. Meir Tells Cabinet Rift Forces Her to Quit

By Terence Smith

JERUSALEM, April 10 (NYT).
-Premier Golda Meir announced her resignation tonight, bringing down her month-old coalition government and making national elections likely within the next several months.

The 75-year-old premier said that she was resigning because deep divisions within her Labor party had made it impossible continue. The party had reached an impasse in recent days over the issue of assigning political responsibility for Israel's military shortcomings at the outset of the October war.

Her announcement came as a surprise, but party leaders and fellow cabinet ministers said later that they accepted it as genuine and final. Mrs. Meir had also threatened last month to step down but was persuaded to stay on and head the new government that was sworn in a month ago today.

Mrs. Meir has been premier five years. Caretaker Basis

Under Israeli law, Mrs. Meir and the members of the present cabinet will continue in office on a caretaker basis until a new government is formed. Tomorrow Mrs. Meir is expected to go to President Ephraim Katzir to inform him formally of her deci-

In theory the President could invite the right-wing opposition, the Likud, to attempt to form a government prior to new elec-tions. This is unlikely, however, since the Likud lacks the parliamentary strength to build a successful coalition.

Despite its caretaker status, the Meir government is expected to continue the indirect negotiations with Syria toward a disengagement-of-forces agreement, talks that have begun under American auspices. Secretary of State Henry Kissinger is expected later this month to expedite the exchange of views.

The meeting had deadlocked over whether Defense Minister Moshe Dayan should accept parliamentary responsibility for the prewar errors and resign or whether, as Gen. Essentially, Pakistan and Bangladesh gained what they wanted: Pakistan will receive all of its prisoners held in captivity since the war, including the 195 men whom Bangladesh wanted to place on trial for murder and rape. # Whitlam Forced Into Calling General Election in Australia

CANBERRA, Australia, April 10 (Reuters),—Prime Minister Gough Whitlam today was prodded into calling a general election after the opposition took the unprecedented step of blocking two routine money bills in the Senate.

But the polls also show that Mr. Whitlam gets a 10 percent higher esteem rating than Liberal party leader Bill Snedden, who replaced former Prime Minister William McMahon. The political maneuvering that came to a head today began when Mr. Whitlam saw an opportunity to wrest control of the Senate from three opposition parties by offering Sen. William Gair, a long-time political foc, th. ambassadorship to the Irish Republic.

The opposition saw through the strategem to get Labor an extra seat in the May 18 elections and decided to force Mr. Whitlam's hand by opposing the money bills.

60 Seats In Senate Labor held 26 seats in the 60-seat Senate. The Liberals had 20, the Country party five, the Democratic Labor party four, independents four and there was one vacant seat. Labor had 67 seats in the 125-in the House should favor Labor, giving them an expected strength of 69 in a House of 127. The Liberal-Country party alliance therefore would have to gain six seats to win back power. Both houses will wind up business tomorrow.

Iraqi Claims U.S. Supplies Arms To Rebel Kurds

BEIRUT, April 10 (UPD).—Iraqi Vice-President Saddam Hussein was quoted today as having accused the United States of giving large amounts of weapons to Kurdish tribesmen defying the Baghdad government from their stronghold in the mountains of northern Iraq.

The Belrut newspaper An Na-har said that Mr. Hussein referred to "huge American aid" being sent to Kurdish rebel leader Mulla Mustafa Barzani "through Iran." # African Drought Is Spreading, Harm'Almost Unmanageable'

-Slowly but inguorably, the drought in Africa is spreading to more and more countries Early signs of possible disaster are appearing in Kenya and Tauzania. But Grought conditions are also being reported in portions of many other countries. including the Sudan in East Mclining the Sulan in East.

Africa, the Central African Republic, and Gambia. Cameroon,

Nigeria, Dahomey, Ghana and Guinea in West Africa. These nations have 30 far largely escaped international attention involving the drought.

Most of these countries have refused offers of help and are surggling with the problem on their own. But some, such as Ghana and the Central African Republic, have requested aid from the United States, if only to determine the drought's effects and preliminary steps that should be taken.

State Department relief officlais are no longer certain in some cases whether the problem is drought or a general deterioration in the capacity of the countries to produce enough food. But a feeling is apparent among many of them that "the consequences of the drought are becoming almost unmanageable." as one official put it.

"The same kind of process is unfolding throughout the con-tinent." he added.

At least 17 of the 39 countries and territories south of the Sahara now are affected by the drought, Most of these countries are in the savannah grass-land belt stretching across the continent just below the desert. Only in five of them, however, has the drought really become a disaster—Mali, Niger, Chad, Mauritania and Ethiopis.

Reports now reaching the State Department from West, Central and East Africa tell of low rainfall in the forest area south of the savannah belt. They also tell of declining crops of cotton, peanuts, cocoa, coffee and grains, of soaring prices for staple foods, of ebbing rivers and underground water tables and of migrations of nomads and peasants in search of food and water.

As many as 15 million people in the 17 countries may be in need of assistance to avoid famine and economic disaster.

In effect, many African countries that had been barely holding their own in the battle to develop (a growth rate of 3 percent or less) are becoming "di-saster prone." as one top official of the U.S. Agency for International Development expressed it.

The only bright soot for these a!flicted African countries, many of which are among the world's poorest, is that the prices of raw materials and important export crops such as coffee and cotton are very high now, partly because of growing shortages re-sulting from the drought.

Kenya appears hardest hit and nearest disaster. About 70 percent of the entire country, the home of an estimated two million people, is affected, particularly in the northeast and eastern regions.

There are no reports of deaths among humans, but cattle losses are put at 250.000.

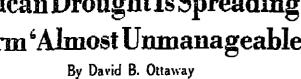

In neighboring Tanzania, government officials now talk of a "food crisis" and news reports from the capital of Dar es Salaam say the country's coffee and grain crops have dropped precipitousiy.

Other reports on drought conditions in countries not previous-

Assuming new elections are held, it is difficult to predict who will head the Labor party list and whether, in fact, the different factions that make up the party will remain united during an election campaign. It seems possible for instance, that Gen. Dayan and his supporters may leave the party and run either with the opposition or on a separate list of their own.

Police Minister Shlomo Hillel said tonight that he expected a "whole new alignment of political forces in Israel. I can't predict how things will develop," he said, "but if the party couldn't hold together on this issue. I doubt it will during an election campaign."

> Power Struggle Seen Mrs. Meir's move seems certain to set off a major power struggle within the party. Deputy Premier Yizal Ailon probably will assert a claim to the leadership on behalf of the more liberal elements. Others may unite around Yosef Almogi, a former minister of labor who was elected mayor of Haifa in the Dec. 31 elections. Another, more remote, candidate for party leadership may be Yitz-hak Rabin, the former chief of staff and ambassador to the United States, who succeeded Mr. Almogi as minister of labor. The Labor party consists of three separate factions that united in 1968. They are the Mapai faction, which Mrs. Meir has headed, Achdut Haavoda, which Mr. Allon heads, and which supports Gen. Dayan. In the dispute over the political responsibility for the war, a majority of the Mapat and Achdut Haavoda members were in favor of ousting Gen. # IRS Sought Data on Burners Of Draft Cards, Fans of Rock

WASHINGTON, April 16 (AP). bers of nonviolent groups were The Internal Revenue Service until recently was prepared to audit the taxes of anyone who attended a rock festival or who burned his draft card, according to an IRS internal memo.

The memo was made public resterday by Sen. Lowell Weicker ir., R.-Conn. It is a January, 1973, status report on what was set up inside the IRS to collect intelligence information on all persons or groups advocating socalled extremist views.

The unit was created during the first year of the Nixon administration and, by 1973, according to the memo, had amassed 8,000 files on individuals and 3,000 on organizations. It had collected 2,000 classified documents and had compiled a list of 16,000 groups or individuals "who fall into the category of posing a threat and probability of tax violations," the IRS memo said. "The magnitude and potential of this facility is unlimited." the memo said. "A recent audit sup-ports the conclusion that this function offers high potential as a deterrent to widespread tax vio-lation by activist groups." The memo was signed by John Flynn, regional commissioner of

The ruling about contributors other than Mr. Yesco came about during the testimony of Mr. Stone, who was confined to answering a single question about the record $2-million campaign contribution he had made to Mr.

A lawyer for Mr. Stans, Robert Barker, asked the judge to excuse the jury for a few moments. The judge did, and Mr. Barker then said:

"Mr. Stone would state that, in 1968, because of his consideration that this was a rare time, once-in-a-lifetime opportunity to support a President whose philosophy he felt strongly in favor of, and a unique position in the history of this country, he contributed $2 million."

Mr. Barker went on to say that "he would also testify that in 1972 he likewise gave support and he contributed in excess of $3 million. He would testify that when he gave this contribution he never requested or expected anything in return except the expected good government."

Mr. Barker argued that "it is important that this jury know that substantial citizens, with good intent, good motive, good purpose and a lifetime of public interest and service, are willing to make substantial amounts Available."

"And this is the atmosphere in which Mr. Stans operated when he accepted $200,000 from Robert Vesco," Mr. Barker con-cluded.

-India said yesterday that relations with the United States had steadily improved in the last year, but the nations in its region are "deeply disturbed" about the U.S. decision to expand its naval facilities in the Indian Ocean.

India said that it wanted to keep the Indian Ocean 'an ocean of peace, free from big-power rivalry."

The Watergate Summit

has begun to impinge increasingly on President Nixon's ability to conduct the nation's foreign policy.

The White House chief of staff, Alexander Haig, drew a contrary conclusion from the President's Paris visit last weekend. "A viable presidency is a cornerstone of world security," Gen. Haig said, drawing the questionable conclusion that the viability of the Nixon presidency was demonstrated by Mr. Nixon's reception in Paris. But Gen. Haig's judgment was premature. Mr. Nixon's diplomatic conferences and street appearances have come under bitter criticism in France as unseemly at a time of memorial services for the late President Pompidou. The charge is made that this activity was designed to counter Watergate by providing evidence of the President's continued influence abroad.

Even more important is the acknowledgment by Secretary of State Kissinger's chief Soviet adviser that Watergate played a negative role during Mr. Kissinger's recent talks-and many diplomatic disappointments -in Moscow. State Department counselor Helmut Sonnenfeldt indicated that Soviet leaders, as a result of Watergate, hesitate to enter new agreements that require congres-

Congressional resistance on trade agreements made by Mr. Nixon two years ago was mentioned by Mr. Sonnenfeldt as a specific example. But a second Strategic Arms Limitation Treaty (SALT-2) would also require congressional approval. Mr. Kissinger's biggest disappointment was his inability to Watergate, after a considerable lag, now make an agreed "conceptual breakthrough" with the Russians on SALT-2.

> Soviet Comunist party secretary Brezhnev and Mr. Nixon both seem determined to maintain the detente atmosphere and to proceed with Mr. Nixon's Moscow visit this summer. But that does not assure the conclusion of important agreements.

> The danger in regard to SALT is not, as some suppose, that a weakened Nixon will sacrifice American interests to obtain a Moscow agreement as a counter to Watergate. The real danger is that a reasonable SALT-2 agreement will be attacked even more violently than the reasonable SALT-1 agreement. Mr. Brezhnev or Mr. Nixon, or both, might prefer to delay a SALT-2 agreement rather than have it repudiated by the U.S. Senate.

> The American national interest, however, lies in achieving a SALT-2 agreement this year. Otherwise, the approaching Soviet deployment of newly-developed MIRV multiple warhead missiles could take the arms race past another critical point of no return. If that deployment pattern is not limited in advance by mutual agreement, a further American buildup and a new spiral in the arms race will be hard to avoid.

> All this points to a need for the Congress to proceed with all deliberate speed in resolving the Watergate debate. That would be so even if Mr. Nixon were not planning a Moscow trip this summer. But the prospect of that voyage and the need for a new SALT pact make it more desirable than ever that the national political crists be resolved before many more months have gone by. # Mr. Saxbe's Myths

The attorney general's list of subversive organizations is, like all punitive rosters drawn up by fearful governments, a shameful page in the nation's annals. An attorney general with the good sense to scrap that useless and vindictive document need offer no explanation or apology. How, then, is one to explain the thought process, if any, that prompted Attorney General William Saxbe to justify his sensible action by suggesting that the list had been rendered obsolete because Communism has lost its attractiveness to "the Jewish intellectual, who was in those [McCarthy] days very enamored of the Communist party"?

This and subsequent non sequiturs, while explaining nothing whatsoever about the need for the lists in question, offer some insight - however blurred - into Mr. Saxbe's judgments formed of a jumble of stereotypes sense. and ill-digested myths.

The discovery of Mr. Saxbe's lack of perception can come as no surprise. He is the man who once thought that the perpetrators of Watergate ought merely to be given "clown suits" for their "ridiculous" actions. At another time, he chose to disassociate himself from the call by Elliot Richardson, his predecessor, for a de-politicized Justice Department. Most recently, in a highly untimely get-tough response to Patricia Hearst's kidnappers, he was called "damn near irresponsible" by the victim's father, in a gross understatement.

It is fair to say that there has been no sign of malice in Mr. Saxbe's utterancesonly a consistent show of harebrained obtuseness, mixed with ignorance. But his unthinking statements suggest strongly the limitations of mind that Mr. Saxbe brings to a once-revered post that demands judgmind. The picture that emerges is one of ment, balance, discernment - and common

Alternative to the Atlantic Pact?

The 25th anniversary of NATO was not celebrated with faniare. The hour is not favorable for great demonstrations of pride and self-confidence. Nevertheless, the anniversary is notable. The West has not seen such a long-lived alliance of this kind since the days of ancient Attica. Unlike its Greek predecessor, NATO has not had to engage in combat. Its success lies in the maintenance of peace and the freedom of its members.

Is the framework of the pact about to shatter? Up to a point, crises can be talked into existence. There is certainly more than mere rhetoric in the present one, but at the same time the phrases in which it is being expressed go further than the facts really justify. Anyone playing with the idea of dissolving the Atlantic Ailiance as a bond between Europe and America must have an alternative. For Europe the alternative is clear: mevitable "Finlandization." With or without the EEC-without the American backbone the states of the Old World would be unable to withstand the pressure of the Soviet superpower. They would have to bow to it far more than they already do in various respects.

-From the Neue Zuercher Zeitung (Zurich). Whitlam and General Election

In Australia, as was the case in Britain.

the prime minister is being drawn into a general election which, at the outset, was not fully intended. The likely defeat in the Senate of two government finance bilis means that Mr. Whitlam has no constitutional option but to call for the dissolution of both the Senate and the House of Representatives. He has been saying that he would exercise this option with or without defeat. When he won in December, 1972, he ended 23 years in opposition for the Labor party. He cannot be certain now that he is fighting or the right issues. . . .

Mr. Whitlam's exasperation with the Senate has produced this situation. Half of its 60 members . . . had been due for re-election on May 18. A crude maneuver, involving a senator in the small Democratic Labor party. was intended to make a Labor majority in the Senate possible. The opposition saw this as skulduggery and responded in kind for the first time in federal history by deciding to reject the finance bills. The pressure has been building up for some time. .. Support has been seeping away from the Labor party. . . . The initial spectacular period of new faces and new decisions has been replaced by distilusion. . . Mr. Whitlam wears a confident look, but the result, at this stage, looks wide open.

Usually these are side issues, having very little, if anything, to do with the evidence for or against impeachment and conviction, but they are important tactical moves that could be influential or even decisive on the final judgment,

Item: For example, the White spelled out in the most careful House demanded that the President's lawyer, James St. Clair, be allowed to sit with the House Judiciary Committee's staif to argue the President's case. This was not normal procedure, but seemed reasonable to the Repub-The Democrats agreed. to avoid an argument that would have split the committee along partisan lines and diverted attention from the evidence.

Item: Sen. Jacob Javits. Item: The President is mounting a very active campaign, by his intervention in the Michigan congressional election campaign and by his recent diplomatic and personal activities at the memorial services in Paris for the late President Pompidou of France. to persuade public opinion that he is an effective campaigner at home and an indispensable campaigner for peace abroad.

Point Dramatized

His principal White House as-sistant, Gen. Alexander Haig Jr., dramatized the point—while the Paris newspapers were criticizing the President for using the Pompidou funeral service for political purpose—by saying:

"It was very evident that European leaders and world leaders with whom the President met continue to look to the United States and President Nixon as an essential factor in the realization of the continuing efforts to develop a structure for a stable international environment."

Well, all this is very interesting and understandable. The idea is growing here, and apparently even within the White House, that the House Judiciary Committee, and maybe even the House itself, will vote out articles of impeachment, and that the issue will finally be whether 34 members of the Senate will finally save him.

Nobody can biame the President for trying to save his political life, for demonstrating his personal energy, his political support, for appealing to public opinion in his televised meetings with selected and sympathetic audiences, even for trying to turn the judicial impeachment process into a partisan split, which, if successful would assure enough votes to block conviction in the lay on a massage table, a doctor ministering to his aching back, when Henry Kissinger came in to give him the bad news during the Moscow summit conference of 1972.

Soviet negotiators would not budge on two areas in which a strategic arms limitation agree ment would leave the United States at a disadvantage. President Nixon told his national security adviser to keep negotiating, but to let the other side know that the President was ready to return to the United States without a SALT treaty.

Mr. Kissinger did so; the Russions caved, and the first SALT agreement was signed. All of us there marveled at the President's cold-blooded poker-playing.

What Risk?

Long afterward, I wondered: What "political risk" had Mr. Nixon taken? The first SALT agreement received polite applause from the left and centur, some criticism from the right. But if the summit had ended with his refusal to sign a lopsided agreement, the political left at home could not have faulted him, and the hardline right would have hailed him as a hero.

In political terms, Mr. Nixon in Moscow was in a no-lose situation: Because the Russians knew he was quite prepared to go back ceeded to settle on fair terms.

This episode comes to mind as President Nixon prepares to visit Moscow again this summer: Many Americans are worried about a President afflicted with Watergate weakness dealing with the Russians: Won't he be inclined to make any deal he can get just to prop up his popular-

The worry is dramatised by the imminence of impeachment, and deepened by indications of the failure of Secretary of State Kussinger's preliminary trip to Moscow. The Soviet press has been attacking the stories based on Kissinger background briefings as destructive of detente, making it appear that the SALT negotiations are falling apart.

Hoot if you will, but such speech would make a strong appeal to the people Mr. Nizon upon to "hang tough gainst his ouster.

Moscow Kitchen

Richard Nixon began in the late 1940s by lambasting the Communists; I recall taking picture of him in a Moscow kitchen in 1959 that we halled as evidence of how he cook "stand up to the Russians"; there would be some poetic justice if he survived as President by "standing up to the Russia one more time

The fourth fact of power pol itics: The Russians know all about the President's present weakness, his need for hardling support, and his old-time talents in cultivating that garden, Anatoly Dobrynin understands the pressures of American politics better than most American politicians

Therefore, paradoxically, the political vulnerability of the President becomes a negotiating strength: If the Russians want to make any kind of SALT deal they will have to take into account the Nixon need to cater his own right wing.

All of which is why Mr. Nixon will be going to Moscow this summer, come hell or high crimes. If he fails to reach an arms control agreement, he will survive as president with no loss to the nation of its strategic position; if he succeeds, he will be blessed by the grandchildren of his fiercest critics as the greatest peacemaker of his time.

The New York Times editorial Thought for Food" (IHT, March 26) indicates that the amount of energy required by highly productive American agriculture is prodigious. So is the amount of energy wasted, in terms of the quantity of food produced for human consumption.

While well aware of the monelary cost, few Americans realize the energy cost of our high-meat diets. About 150 gallons of fuel. each year, are required to raise the crops eventually feeding each American. But much of the harvest, including that of some 80 million acres in corn, feeds livestock. Thereby much of the food value is lost. It takes, for instance, more than seven pounds of feed grains to produce a pound of meat.

In a hungry world, such waste may not be tolerable much longer, We could increase food produc-tion significantly, feed more people, if we shortened our food chain, ate more plant products and less food and energy-wasting meats. Replacing animal husbandry with energy husbandry, we can increase the world food supply. ALICIA MOORE d'Estaing of the Independent Republicans said he would not declare until after the period of mourning-a device to discredit the early announcement by Mr. Chaban-Delmas.

Former Prime Minister Edgar Faure, a veteran centrist politician, announced his candidacy early in order to break up the present governing coalition which links the Gaullists and the Independent Republicans. The Communists declined to put forward their own candidate presumably so that it would not be demonstrated that they had less votes than the Socialists, who have a strong presidential candidate in former Interior Minister Francois Mitterrand

Not only have cheap political games marked the debut of the campaign but the candidates are a good deal less than Olympian in stature. Mr. Chaban-Del-mas has been involved in a controversy over his taxes.

Mr. Mitterrand, whom I visited at his home the other day, presents himself as a family man of grave dignity. But not so long ago he was known as a publicityseeking adventurer.

Given these personal qualities the candidates are not going to be in position to impose their own views in the imperious way of De Gaulle. They are going to have to court popular favor and make deals right and left.

Inevitably the presidential office will lose prestige and the National Assembly will acquire authority. France is already on the way back to being a parliamentary republic finds an exact counterpart to foreign affairs. Because of his prestige, De Gaulle was able to impose on this country a policy which stressed French independence as a nuclear nove pursuing its own special interests in dealing with the Communist world, the Near East and Europe.

That France-first line is not particularly popular here-especially since heavy outlays for national security have worked to promote inflation. A public opinion poll just released by the magazine L'Express, for example shows that while 68 percent of Frenchmen regard high prices as a burning issue, only 13 percent think it is important for the next president France's position in the world.

Most of the candidates are already on record against the Gaullist foreign policy.

Mr. Mitterrand, though backed by the Communists, favors an integrated Western Europe. So strong is his support for the Atlantic Alliance that he startled George McGovern by the vehemence of his insistence that American troops remain in West Germany. As to Mr. Chaban-Delmas, his chief adviser, Jacques Delors, believes the French economy can only be managed in the context of European coopers-

No doubt there will be some lip service peid to Gaullist principles during the electoral campaign, and perhaps the first months of the new regime. But the long-range outlook goes the other way. All signs indicate that this country is on the point of closing the Gaullist parenthesis in French history.

The purpose would have been to create a barrier to keep the disease from spreading toward Central America, Mexico and the United States.

The idea was dropped, according to two participants, partly in response to a National Academy of Sciences report that cited new evidence of human illness and death from spraying in Vietnam.

The idea was discussed at a meeting in Panama attended by representatives of the Panamanian Health Ministry, the U.S. Center for Disease Control and the Gorgas Memorial Laboratory, a private, U.S. financed tropical disease research facility in Panama City.

ROME, April 10 (NYT).-The Vatican, in an unusual procedure, today amended a remark by Pope Paul VI on the future of Jerusalem The new wording seemed to indicate a hardened Vatican policy on the politically sensitive

In an address during his weekly general audience, the Pope this morning advocated an "appropriate international juridical guardianship for the holy places" in the Middle East, and deplored the fact that Jerusalem was still at the center of controversy.

More than 10,000 Holy Week pilgrims and tourists were present in the Vatican's modern audience hall on the south side of St. Peter's Basilica. Most of them did not grasp the meaning of the Pope's speech, which was ın Italian.

The original wording of the papal statement on the religious shrines in the Holy Land, and on Jerusalem, appeared later in the bulletin that the Pontifical Commission for Social Communications, the Vatican's public information department, distribmes daily in its press room near St Peter's Square.

Early this afternoon, Vatican press officers withdrew the mimeographed bulletin and substituted another one. It quoted the Fope as having called for "an appropriate statute with international guarantees for the holy city of Jerusalem and a convenient juridical guardianship for the holy places.

Diplomats and newsmen who follow Vatican activities, and have learned to analyze every word in papal propouncements to the point of hair-splitting, immediately speculated on the meaning of the change. The prevailing view among their observers tonight was that Pope Paul seemed to be revert-ing to the old Vatican thesis of internationalization of Jerusalem. The chief Vatican spokesman for the press. Federico Alessandrini, declared himself unable to comment on the significance of the change. He said that he bad not attended the papal audience, and suggested that the correction may have been due to a typing error in the orginal text, adding: "Such things to hapman, Mr. Alessandrini, a layman, whether Pope would not discuss whether Pope Paul had meant to call for internationalization of Jerusalem, and said that today's remarks must read in the context of all statements by Pope Paul concerning the Holy Land during the last

OPERA IN PARIS-

Paying a Debt and Getting a Hit

By David Stevens

PARIS, April 10 (IHT).—The Paris Opera joined last night in the strangely belated revival of Verdi's "I Vespri Siciliani." simultaneously discharging an old debt to the composer and acquiring an authentic hit for the season's repertory.

Strangely belated, because although it is one of the composer's middle-to-late works-falling between "La Traviata" and "Simon Boccanegra"—it has not really taken a significant part in the Great Verdi Revival, which has been going on for close to half a century and has restored to the active repertory several half-neglected works. It did not, like some of Verdi's flawed masterworks, benefit from a revision by the composer himself. Nor. un-til very recently, had it been recorded in full—a consecration bestowed in the long-play era on even the composer's most obscure early operas.

At the bottom of this mysterious business is the origin of the work, which was a commission from the Paris Opera for a work to be given during the grand exhibition of 1855. It was to be a grand opers in the manner invented by Meyerbeer and the ubiquitous librettist Eugène Scribe -five acts with ballet, grand choruses, spectacular effects, magnificent scenery and a historical subject. Scribe supplied the libretto, a lot of warmed-over

Enough Agony

This job gave Verdi enough work, as he said, "to stun a bull." and enough agony to make him leery of the Opera for a lifetime experience reaching its farcical climax when the leading soprano disappeared with her boy friend for a few weeks during rehearsals. She sang the premiere anyway, which gives you an idea of how the Paris Opera was run in those days. More seriously, Verdi had to deal with a libretto that was the precise opposite of what he always wanted and responded to best-terseness and emotional sincerity. Yet, it was a falling out of sight.

There is a wealth of music here straight out of Verdi's top drawer. If he responded mechanically to some mechanical situations, he also supplied rich musical clothing for Scribe's collection of cardboard dummies. Besides the relatively well-known selections— the splendid overture, the popular bass aria "O tu Palermo," the baritone's "In braccio alle dovizie," and the soprano's last-act showpiece, the so-called Bolero-there are some fine soprano-tenor duets, a superb scene for tenor and baritone that stands squarely in the great line of Verdian father-son duets, a powerfully expressive quartet, and a moving purporting to deal with the events of Easter Monday of 1232 in Palermo, when the French occuform, making it a bit of an anachronism in Verdi's steady march toward "Otello" and "Faistaff," much of the music also looks ahead-such as the machinations of the assassins against a background of deliberately trivial ball music, a technique already used and to be used even more tellingly in the final act of "Un Ballo in Mas-

The Paris production comes by way of the Hamburg State Opera and the New York Met, where it har already been produced by the same team, headed by John Dex-ter, the English stage director, and Josef Svoboda, the Czech scenic designer and theorist.

Svoboda eschews realism in favor of a timeless abstraction. His basic unit of a long flight of stairs is subjected to various changes in shape, and with the addition of other scenic units stands for a variety of locations. It is disconcerting in an un-familiar (pseudo) historical work to be deprived of representational scenery, but there are powerful compensations.

The overhead lighting throws the action into a permanently mobile chiaroscuro, of which Jan Skalicky's black-white costumes are an integral element. The flexibility of the set gives a welcome fluidity to the procrustean five-act format, and papers over the more incomprehensible comings and goings in the plct. Dexter uses the stairway to move his characters with expressive effect; concentrating on their elemental human dilemmas. The scene in which he has Procida stare down at Arrigo and Elena from the gloom at the top of the stairs, during their Act II duet, adds a dimension to Scribe's mindless plotter with one silent coup de

The principal cut in the original score was, of course, the half-hour ballet that was obligatory in 1855 and superfluous now (those interested in the music can hear it, lavishly included in the recent RCA recording), but it remains a long work, lasting three and a half hours with two intermissions.

At this period France was eating chestnuts from Lombardy, which were harked in the streets of Paris; but by the 16th century native chestnuts from the central plateau and the region of Lyons had gained favor, and were being served on the royal table. That they were popular in England too may be deduced from the passage in "Macbeth" where one of the witches complains:

A sailor's wife had chestnuts in her lap. And munch'd, and munch'd, end munch d quoth 1:

"Aroint thee, witch," the rump-fed ronuon cries. The sorceress was so incensed at being denied a treat of chestnuts that she arranged with her esters to stir up tempests in the path of the sailor's ship.

Basic Nutriment

In its long history as a human food, the chestnut has been an aliment of extremes: it has provided luxurious dishes for the rich, but more often the basic nutriment for the poor. In its aristocratic aspect it wiped out the distinguished Italian Challant family, whose last survivor, Giulio Giacomito, 12 at the time. died from a surfeit of chestnut cream. As a festive food, the chestnut appears on the New Year's menu in Japan (a country where connoisseurs do not hesitate to send to distant cities for the exact type of chestnut they prefer, but this may be less a tribute to the lusciousness ct the nut than the result of the custom of composing the meal of foods symbolizing the virtues which it is hoped will be exercised during the coming year. Part of the Sino-Japanese character which means "mastery" auggests the sign for "chestnut"
—a pun in ideograms.

White wine accompanies chestnuts at the castagnade, the annual festival at which La Garde-Freinet, near St.-Tropez, France, reminds the nation that it grows the best chestruts of the region. The marron glace (candied chestnut) is in France a traditional harbinger of the Christmas-New Year's holiday season. This complicated confection, whose preparation involves 16 separate operations, is claimed by the nch who say they it in the time of Louis XIV; but Aretino had praised the candied chestnuts of Chiusa Pesio in

The chestnut has always been much less important for the rich than for the poor, who could pick up free in the forests a filling food capable of replacing such staples as cereals or pota-toes. In the three countries which today still make the largest use of chestnuts-Japan, Italy and France-it has often been the principal food of the poor. It was so described in Italy as early as the third century BC., and after the collapse of the Roman Empire many Italian populations were reduced largely to chestruts eaten boiled or

In English we talk of a diet of bread and water where the French would say jeuner à l'eau et à la châtaigne (fasting on water and chestnuts); note that the kind of chestnut mentioned here is not the marron, which would carry too rich a connotation. Molière established the miserly character of Harpagon (simultaneously underlining the lowly position of the chestnut) when he depicted him as giving what he considered a sumptuous banquet, beginning with "a few boiled chestnuts." Before the potato entered the French larder, chestnuts provided the basic food of the poor; in Corsica, always and still one of the poorest parts of France, chestnuts hold the place elsewhere occupied by the potato. This is something of an overstate It is true that various peoples at various times have made do with little else, because they had little else, but they were not getting a balanced diet. Chestnuts are indeed highly nourishing; 3 1/2 ounces provide 250 calories and 3 1/3 pounds is enough to supply the day's entire caloric talent needs for an average worker. Dried chestnuts contain as much nitrogen as wheat. The nut is relatively rich in mineral salts, especially calcium, phosphorus and potassium—twice as much of the last as in cereals-which makes chestnuts excellent promoters of growth in infants. # U.S. Oil Firms Said to Violate Anti-Trust Law

By Richard D. Lyons

WASHINGTON, April 10 (NYT). -- Witnesses before a congressional subcommittee charged yesterday that major oil companies have been breaking anti-trust laws for years with the knowledge and sometimes the approval of the Departments of Justice and the Interior.

Rep. John Dingell, D-Mich.. chairman of a House subcommittee investigating federal oil and gas lessing policy, and three witnesses complained that the major oil corporations are either dictating the terms of survival to smaller companies or forcing them

Rep. Dingell said the connections between the companies were a "monstrous web" of ties involving exploration, lease bidding, producing, refining, pipelines and marketing.

Soviet Trade With West Jumps 43% in '73

$1.62 billion. That was still less than one-third the total of Soviet trade with East Germany, Russia's No. 1 trade partner.

However, the overall growth of Soviet trade with Socialist countries was a very modest 9 percent. This meant that for the first time in years the Socialist world accounted for less than 60 percent-58.4 percent, in fact of the Soviet Union's global trade in 1973.

With the rest of the world feeling the squeeze of the energy crisis, Moscow stepped up energy exports last year in all categories.

Priority to Communists Today's preliminary report in the Economic Gazette did not give a detailed breakdown in all categories, but traditional Socialist trading partners appeared to have been given priority in receiving increased oil exports from the Soviet Union

Soviet oil exports increased from 107 million metric tons in 1972 to 118 million metric tons in 1973. The share going to Socialist countries increased from 60 to 68 million metric tons, from year to year. A metric ton is roughly equivalent to seven barrels.

Of Moscow's Western trading partners Finland received 10 million tons, Italy about 9 million, West Germany 6 million, and France more than 5 million, In Eastern Europe, Czecho-slovakia received 14,3 million tons, East Germany 13 million tons, Poland more than 12 million, Bulgaria more than 9 million and Hungary more than 6

Soviet natural gas exports jumped from 3.4 billion cubic meters in 1972 to 4.9 billion in 1973, and its electric energy exports from 6.9 billion kilowatt hours in 1972 to 9,4 billion in 1973. But no breakdown of recipients was given.

In a separate report today Tass said that Moscow and its East European trading partners, including Romania, were near agreement on construction of a 1.850-mile gas pipeline from Orenburg in the southern Urals to Uzhgorod, on the Soviet border with Czechoslovakia, to deliver more gas to Eastern Europe.

Four big questions

Here are the answers to the four most important questions raised in recent dialogues between Fisons and senior people in the international investment world since the annual results were published on March 25th, 1974.

Q.1. Fisons 1973 results show excellent growth in all activities. How do you account for this?

A. By anticipation of future trends and the realignment of resources to cope with these trends. Whilst a viable fertilizer activity remains vital to us, we have also backed industries where research is particularly fruitful, like agrachemicals—and especially pharmaceuticals, where overseas demand is 10/12 times greater than in the home market.

Q.2. Do you see this rapid growth in pharmaceuticals as a continuing trend?

Yes, and at an accelerating rate. Coming from behind a few years ago, we now rank among the leading British pharmaceutical companies with an increasing international reputation.

Q.3. Is there a danger of Fisons becoming over-dependent on pharmaceuticals?

A. No. Agrochemicals, for example, has a most satisfactory overseas growth, because of the increasing demand for the world's major food crops. A range of new products has been introduced in the last two years including an outstandingly effective insecticide for which no country however small can fail to find a use, and over 50% of Agrochemical sales went overseas last year.

Q.4. What does the future hold for

 A. Given that health is of fundamental importance in the world, Fisons are as well placed as most to help look after human health, animal health and plant health—globally.

Are we running out of silver?

Today, an unusual supply-demand situation in silver offers you an opportunity to gain substantial profits.

For the past 23 years, world silver consumption has exceeded mine production. For each of the past 13 years, the gap has exceeded 100 million ounces.

Lately, the gap has been widening still further. In 1971, consumption exceeded mine production by 133 million ounces. In 1972, by 184 million ounces. And in 1973, consumption surpassed production by more than 234 million ounces. As a result, the world is rapidly running out of available above ground supplies.

Major bull market in silver

When demand for an item consistently exceeds production, we can expect its price to rise. And that's exactly what began to happen to silver, late in 1971. By mid-1972, it was apparent that a major bull market in silver was under way.

By the end of 1972, silver had risen from $1.45 per ounce to $2.02. Yet, despite the sharply higher prices, silver consumption actually grew (up 9.1% from 1971). In 1973, the same pattern emerged: sharply higher silver prices (up to $3.26), along with increased consumption (up 15% over 1972). So far this year, the price of silver has broken all previous records.

Is there still time to "cash-in"?

With silver already at record prices, you may wonder: Is there still a chance for profits in silver? We believe so. Of course, no investment is without risk, but we believe the bull market in silver-and your opportunity for profits-is still in the early stage. We'd like to explain why, and suggest a few silver investments we believe will be particularly profitable in the years ahead.

So may we mail you a FREE copy of the new, expanded, Second Edition of The Case for Silver? This free informational booklet, by Louis E. Carabini, President of the Pacific Coast Coin Exchange, shows you:

- When to expect the recurring shortfalls in mine production to create an acute shortage of silver;
- The unique properties of silver and why it's an essential, unsubstitutable commodity in most applications; Why consumption and production of silver are
- both largely unresponsive to price changes;
- Projections for the price of silver, including timing estimates;
- Why silver is valued as a hedge against inflation
- Case histories of 4 bad inflations (including the nightmare runaway inflation in post World War I Germany), and how silver fared during each.
- Four ways of investing in silver: the drawbacks and advantages of each. Which seems to offer the best opportunity to gain both the profits you want and the protection from inflation you need.

ACTUALLY I HAVE A DOUBLE "

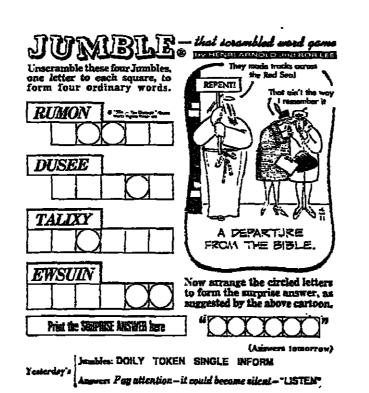

HER LAUGH MADE ME HAPPY---

THE LATE HARVEY CROSBECK By Gilbert Mülstein. Doubleday. 285 pp. $6.95.

Reviewed by Anatole Broyard

ond-rate nightclub comedian will turn ugly, when the sweat of his brow runs into his eyes, and he feels that his audience is not worth his ulcer. His jokes will come forth deformed by the labor that produced them, the afterbirth still clinging. He will drop all pretenses, all suggestion of sublimation, and simply attack. If he cannot seduce, then he will ravish. This is the recurrent sour note in an otherwise successful comedy, "The Late Harvey Grosbeck," by Gil-bert Millstein. Nursing a grudge is the inevitable expression, for Mr. Millstein ministers to his private sore spots with a grotesquely disproportionate solici-tude. He will dose a rancorous gibe with a whole dictionary of preciosities, trying to dress it up as a witticism. In most other respects, "The Late Harvey Grosbeck" strikes me as an extremely lively picture of a cantankerous man a losing battle with life in the 1970s. Harvey Grosbeck is a passionate anachronism, a jaundiced, Jewish, shrunken Samuel John-son, a man who, if his analysis had truly liberated him, could cheerfully have murdered anyone who egregiously misused a word, condemned an architectural curiosity to demolition, or embraced a modish absurdity. Harvey's life is a carnage of Pyrrhic victories, a shower of Parthian shots. He is the Monday-morning quarterback of 20th-century his-

Harvey is a rewrite editor for a metropolitan newspaper that shall remain nameless, I will confine myself to remarking that, while no newspaper is beyond the reach of irony, Mr. Milistein's is more corroded than corrosive. Harvey's most inclusive complaint-for complaint is the impetus of his crabwise progressis that he has no metaphor by which to live, no symbol to serve or suffer for. This reduces Harvey to a series of random lunges at life, and Mr. Millstein's novel at form. If neither of them quite succeeds, they fall short with considerable elegance. "The Late Harvey Grosbeck" offers us so many secondary gratifications, as the Freudian analysts used to say, that it hardly matters whether or not it fails in its primary endeavor. The author takes an almost obscene delight in linguistically flaying anything that smacks of radical chic or garden-variety piety. He way he pounces on a fine figure of a word is almost uxorious, as if it is his and his alone. He writes of Harvey's re-solve to change his ways: "If epiphany is not to be experienced overnight, neither is the alteration of old habit; the pluck and iterance of reflex make their customary demands in charnel houses." Of the "intensified sexuality" on the sidewalks of

THERE are times when a sec. Fifth Avenue, he says: The women, in costume, posture, strice, made a play of boldness, each different from the other, all very much the same. They rioted before the men, seeking confirmation from one another of what they were doing and drove all before them, all the while pushing at their hair, pulling at their skirts, chewing on bits of food bought on side streets."

Mr. Millstein has enough brig to pick you up and carry you bodily through his book. It is worth reading for the frequent set pieces, the cameos, alone. For Harvey is one of those wild-eyed men of principle who will never back away from a confrontation with the powers of darkness. Faced with the catatonic indifference of the salespeople in a famous Fifth Avenue bookstore, he summons up unsuspected reserves of strength and trimphantly carries the issue to its reduction ad absurdum. Approached by a daughter of the counterculture begging money to buy food for her baby, he takes her to a grocery, huys the food, then goes home with her and feeds the baby himself. He even tries in his determination to leave no untidy loose ends, to accept her tender of gratitude, but the fact that her tender parts are tattooed puts him off.

Though he ransacks the "rag and bone shop of the heart," Mr. Millstein can find no better fulcrum for his plot than an implansible Mafia threat on Harvey's life. While he belabors this for its comic and/or tragic potential, one feels that his talents could be much better employed. The Malia man is one of those "thought up" ideas that writers fall back on when nothing comes to them from their unconscious, when they have no clear notion of what they want to say or do to us. Considering the quality of his materials, though, the author acquits himself better than one might have expected.

Harvey's funeral, or fantasy of a funeral, is presided over by Baleen, the editor of his news-paper, who for once is given a Machiavellianism commensurate with his high position. Baleen decides to commemorate Harvey in terms of his own late enthusiasms, carried to the point of parody. After sulogizing Harvey in the platitudes he struve to seek out and destroy when he was alive, the editor decrees that, since Harvey was one of the last true lovers of his native city, his dirge would songs about that metropolis, as well as a rendering of street cries common to the early half of the 19th century, interpersed the calls of birds to whom New York was home: the common English sparrow, the grackle and the pigeon." When his funeral has wound its stubbornly contested way through the choked streets of Lower Manhattan, so that Harvey can pay his last respects to the decaying landmarks so dear to his backward heart, he is to be laid to rest in Brooklyn. next to his hero, Boss Tweed.

But Mr. Millstein has too much surplus ingenuity to let his hero rest, here or in eternity. True to type, Harvey has the last word. As everyone knows, old rewrite editors never die-they just wear away, like a blue pencil too short to be sharpened one more time.

Meditation helped West defeat the contract in the diagramed

Three no-trump was reached after North had opened with a strong artificial bid of one club and East jumped to two diamonds. South's double was negative, indicating some high-card strength. On the next round, he decided to try for three no-trump rather than four hearts after West bid clubs and North hearts.

As the club bid marked the linesse in that suit as a winner. South could count eight tricks-and so could West. A diamond was led to the king, and if East had persevered with dia-monds South would have had his ninth trick, But East played well by shifting to the spade jack. South covered with the queen, and West won with the king.

At this point, West plunged into meditation. He quickly saw that a diamond continuation would be an error; that a spade return would allow dummy to score the nine, and that a club play would allow South to make three club tricks rather than two. The situation seemed to call for a heart lead, but West projected the play forward five tricks-and found that South was destined to come out on top unless he misjudged the play.

So West finally decided his only hope was to take advantage of declarer's ignorance of the spade situation. East's play of the jack strongly suggested that he had the ten, so West finally got the play moving again by produc-ing the spade eight. If South had now taken a further 15 minutes to analyze what West had been thinking about, he might have concluded that the play of the nine from dummy was indicated. But he took East's play of the spade jack at its face value as a sequence lead and played low. from dummy.

The spade ace was taken, the club queen finessed succ and hearts were cashed Finally. South took the club ace and played a space, expecting East to win with the ten and concede the last trick to the diamond queen. But West produced the ten, to South's discomfiture, and the contract was down one.

But the 'Nightmare' Is Over

Home Run No. 715 Cost Aaron Some Sleep

By Joseph Durso

ATLANTA, April 10 (NYT),-It was the "day after"—the day after he had made baseball history—and Henry Aaron cased into the Atlanta Braves' locker room, slipped some soft music into the cassette inside his cubiele, aat down on a wooden stool, rawned and said:

"The average person can't season, all winter, spring training, right up until today. Now morrow. But not tonight,"

The 40-year-old outfielder was beat because people wouldn't let him so to sleep after he had driven a fastball pitched by Al Downing of the Lc- Angeles Dodgers into the bullpen in left field at 9:07 Monday night.

"So, did you celebrate, Hammer?" asked Dusty Baker, the center fielder, in a locker room that suddenly seemed empty and calm "the day after."

The bat was a 34-ounce, 34-1 3 inch Louisville Slugger, the kind Agron's been swinging most of his career with some minor changes—a little longer and heavier than the one he borrowed from Del Crandali 15 years ago. "I never had a dream of how it might happen." Aaron said. "I was just happy it happened-especially here, and on TV with my family in the ballpark." Also in the ballpark at the time were the white governor of Georgia, Jimmy Carter, and the black mayor of Atlanta, Maynard Jackson. They had stood next to each other on the field before the game, symbolizing to some observers the fact that Aaron had become a hero to both races after some sniping at a black ballplayer overtaking a legendary white man's home-run record. After No. 715 cleared the fence, the game was interrupted for 11 minutes while Aaron stood besieged on the grass. Later, between innings, he received a phone call from President Nixon, inviting him to the White House Still later, the Dodgers made the last of their six errors—under the pressure of history-and the Braves won the game, 7-4.

"I never was afraid of any injury during the off-season that might keep from going to the record." Aaron said. Then he phrased it in one of the little stoical expressions that he favors: "Whatever will be, will be."

Later, Henry took a few swings in batting practice and then bundled himself into a Windbreaker on the bench while the Dodgers recovered their poise and trounced the Braves, 9-2. The leading home-run hitter in baseball just sat and watched, surrounded by 10,548 customers and "3,137 empty seats.

The Home Run Era Still in Vogue

By Leonard Koppett

NEW YORK, April 10 (NYT).— Hank Aston broke Babe Ruth's career home run record in the Year 54 of the Home Run Era.

Its an era that was conceived in 1920, born in 1921, and fully matured by 1930; and it has been thriving ever since as the basic way to play major league base-

It was brought about deliberately by baseball authorities, in response to a complex set of forces that included a gambling scandal, economic and real estate considerations, changed technology, a fatal accident, and the fortuitous presence of Ruth. whose exceptional talent triggered recognition of what baseball's new path should be.

As developed in the 19th century and fully commercialized in the carly years of the 20th, baseball was a game in which home were rare. To circle the bases, the batter had to hit the ball so far, or so sharply between the fielders, that it took them at least 16 to 20 seconds to retrieve it and throw it home. In the earliest years, on fields that had no fences at all, this could happen more frequently than later, when all major league games were played in completely enclosed grounds. So in 1906, for instance, major league teams played a total of 1.222 games and hit 249 home runs. The Chicago White Sox won the American League pennant, and the World Series, and hit a grand total of seven home runs all year. But by the end of the 1919 season, baseball was in serious trouble. Rumors were widespread that gamblers had fixed the 1919 World Series, bribing the Chicago White Sox to lose to Cincinnati. In a post-war beent, other entertamments, especially the movies, were competing for ettention. Total attendance for both leagues in 1919 was about 65 million, an average of 400,000 per team.

Braning Kills Chapman In 1920, the gambling scandal was confirmed, and on Aug. 70 the tragic accident occurred. Ray Chapmain, Cleveland shortstop. was struck in the head by a pitch thrown by Carl Mays of the Yankees, at the Polo Grounds, and Chapman suffered a double skull fracture. He died in the hospital the next morning. But even before these two overt events, the scandal and the death, the wave of the future eas beginning. Ruth was its catalyst, his extraordinary ability to hit towering drives preceding the new technology It was probably true, as manufacturers later claimed, that the use of Australian wool, not available during wartime, made the 1920 baschall livelier than its predecossors. So even during the 1920 season. the revolution was percolating. Ruth, one of the greatest pitchers of his day, simply could not be p wasted resture between starts. In 1919, for the Boston Red Sox. the had hit 29 home runs, breakting a record that had been set in the 1680s. Traded to the Royangees, he hit the incredible stotal of 51 in 1920-and Yank-e attendance doubled, to 1.3 milijon, three times the 1919 aver-wound tighter and made more resilient to promote distance hitting; they outlawed all tampering with the ball by the pitcher -applying moisture or other substance, scratching the cover discoloring it—to eliminate "trick" deliveries, with less predictable trajectories; and they insisted that umpires keep a fresh white baseball in play at all times, and especially if the hitter asked for one, to improve visibility.

The last two steps were intended, at least partly, to in-crease the batter's safety—but, of course, better vision for safety also meant better vision for hitting the ball. And the desired effect was immediate. In 1919, the two leagues had a combined batting average of 263; in 1921

But the increase in home runs wasn't quite as immediate, because the players of the day had all grown up indoctrinated in the old style-a level. controlled swing designed for singles

Under the new conditions, however-as Ruth was showing-a man could consistently clear fences, Ruth was so good he could do it anyhow; and Rogers Hornsby, regarded as the best of righthanded hitters, produced 42 home runs in 1922 (while batting .401). The next generation learned the lesson. When Ruth hit 60 homers in 1927, and his teammate, Lou Gehrig, 49, they ac-counted for nearly 12 percent of the 922 home runs bit that sea-son. By 1940, with no individual player hitting more than 43 (Johnny Mize), the two leagues were hitting 1,571 homers. And by 1950 the total was beyond 2,000. More players hit homers because more tried more often. They struck out more, too.

By then, also, the real estate factor had done its work. To sell tickets, you must enclose your playing field with a fence. But when only a few thousands attend, permanent scals are needed only behind home plate and along the base lines. America's early ball parks had outfield fences near the external boundary of the property, with much outfield playing area inside. As baseball began prospering in the 20th century, and as population grew, bleacher seats behind the outfield fence became desir-

Supporting a Spouse Through College

By Nadine Brozan

NEW YORK (NYT).—It was called the "putting hubby through" diploma, and it was once awarded by universities as token thanks to wives of students.

The mock sheepskin is a quaint relic today, but the practice it honored-supporting a spouse while he became somebodyendures with variations in graduate and professional schools. But with the drive for equality propelling women into the upper reaches of academe, the decision to support a student husband is being weighed on a new scale. After all, the reasoning goes, if John can study medicine, why can't Jane; if he aspires to a professorship, why not she?

And in the face of dual ambitions, the question of who pays for whom and how has taken on new complexities. No statistics have yet surfaced, but impressions collected from New York to California indicate that, for all its impact, women's liberation has yet to turn the tide. In short, the wife working to aid her husband is still the norm.

Man's Rank

"This society still views it as more important for the husband to get an advanced degree, so important that wives are still willing to work toward that end. The man still comes first," said Irwin W. Sizer, dean of the Massachusetts Institute of Tech-

The man may indeed rank first, but for a growing band of couples it's only temporary. Many have devised formulas for the pursuit of two degrees; going through simultaneously, alternating, combining part-time employment and study, postponing

Whatever the blueprint, the constantly soaring tuition and cost of living-which can now total $6,000 to $8,000 a year-create a burden that is usually countered with a patchwork of resources. The Alexander Romanovs, for example, have at various times financed his master's degree courses at the Manhattan School of Music and her doctoral work in French at Columbia University with an incentive award, federal, state and university loans and a gift of two months' rent from Mr. Romanov's father

"Even so, we've sometimes taken out emergency loans from Columbia to pay the rent." Mrs. Romanov said, noting with relief that her husband now holds a fulltime teaching position while continuing his own studies.

While students struggle to make academic ends meet, universities find that drastic cutbacks in federal government and foundation aid have left them with fewer dollars for fellowships. As a result, financial officers are retooling the criteria on which they distribute aid, putting more emphasis on need and less on

"Right now none of us really knows how to assess need; it's an Alice-in-Wonderland situation," said Dean Peter McKinney of Harvard University's Graduate School of Arts and

How do young women feel about that clarion call in a time when they are redefining their own roles?

Their attitudes seem to be a delicate balance between hardnosed realism and cooperation. "Everyone agrees that this is a joint decision that the husband will attend school no matter what the sacrifice: post-ponement of children, no car, little furniture," said Carol Foglesong, president of the Dames Club, a 600-member organization of graduate students' wives and married graduate students at the University of Chicago.

"Many people feel, 'Tm going to put him through now, but he will put me through later,' " she said.

Although she has a bachelor's degree from Wellesley College and a master's from Wesleyan University, Katharine Jones does not resent being a secretary at MIT, a job that became crucial when her husband's Danforth Foundation grant for work in English history at Harvard expired.

Bored at First

"When I first started almost three years ago, I was bored and felt I wasn't using my degrees, but I'm not planning a career, so I really don't mind," she said.

"No, I'm really not using my education," said Karl Nirmel of her position as a book processor at NYU's Elmer Bobst Library. "But I feel that because my husband is under a great deal of stress, it would be very difficult if I had a stressful job."

Mrs. Nirmel's husband. Chitta, decided after getting his PhD in engineering that he would be happier in law and is in his second year at the NYU School of Law.

And then there's Ann Pearson, whose husband is in the graduate tax program at NYU School of Law. "I've never paid any of my husband's tuition, nor he mine," she said. "We both borrowed money for our educations and both paid off our own loans. That way I can never say when I'm 35, 'I put you through law school.' His education belongs to him, and mine to me."

The Duchess of Windsor PEOPLE: Arrives in New York

Accompanied by two of her pug dogs, her attorney and a sec-retary, the Duchess of Windsor arrived in New York Tuesday aboard the Italian liner Raffaello. Commenting on life since the death of the duke two years ago, the duchess said, "I don't go out as much and I'm much loneller." The former American socialite said that the British monarchy has changed since 1936 when the then King Edward VII had to abdicate to marry her, "They made a fuse then, but I don't think they would make a fuss now," she said, adding that she gets along well with the British royal family. The duchess, who said that she did not intend to write an autobiography ("That would be the most dreadful thing to do"), will be staying at New York's Waldorf Astoria for about

AN EXPLANATION: Julie Nixon Eisenhower says President Nixon could have contested portions of his back tax bill but did not in order to encourage Americans to support the tax collection system. Speaking in Memphis, Mrs. Eisenhower said: "Frankly, my father's entire position on the tax matter has been one of trying to encourage people to support the Internal Revenue [Service] system."

Russian research chemist Pavel Litvinov, 34, who spent four years in exile in Siberia, has arrived in New York and says that he was happy to be in the "land of the immigrants." Litvinov spent four months in prison and four years working in a Siberian mine from 1968 to 1972, "The fact that my name was known in the West saved me from more severe punishment," he said. He and his family were allowed to leave the Soviet Union last month.

SUED: Doris Duke, in New York and in Trenton, N.J. In New York, a private investigation agency says that the tobacco helress owes almost $32,000 for an investigation of a $10,000 burglary at her New Jersey estate, In Trenton, the Animal Medical Center of New York City is suing for $1.775 million, charging that "armed members of the Duke police department" halted research projects at Duke Farms in Hillborough Township, N.J. Also named in the suit are Elroy C. Leoppard, described as Miss Duke's "security adviser," and Laon Amar, a friend of the heiress, who is also executive vice. president of her private Southeast Asia Artistic and Cultural Foun. dation. The research projects were being conducted on Miss Duke's property under a lease containing a 30-day cancellation clause. The complaint says that Miss Duke gave the center notice on Feb 1 that the lease was to be terminated on March 4. Four days later, the complaint charges, Leop-pard, Amar and the "azmed Duke police for dibly took possession of the property and "confiscated animals, records and laboratory facilities." The center says it will have to "expend years of addi-tional work to restore the research projects to their former status" The center had been working on the Duke property since 1968.

The "Sonny and Cher" program, one of the top-rated CBS shows has been canceled for the fall season. Fred Silverman, programming chief of CBS, announced the news Friday but declined to say if the recent breakup of the couple's marriage had had any influence on the CBS decision Sonny Bono, 39, and Cher. 27 were married in October, 196, and split up last February.
